

Progress Photo Guidelines

Your photos are your data. Let's make them count.

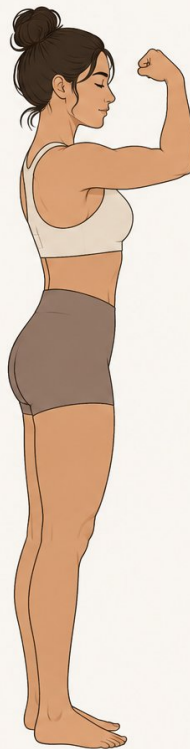

Progress photos are one of the most powerful tools we have together. They show what the scale never will. To make sure yours are actually useful and that I can track what's changing month to month, here's exactly how to take them.

THE THREE SHOTS YOU NEED

face forward, flex everything

turn 90°, core engaged

squeeze those glutes

Take all three every single time. One without the others makes it really hard to track progress properly.

The Golden Rules

Follow these every time and your photos will actually be comparable.

- Same spot, every time. Pick a wall, a corner, a door. Make it your spot. Consistency here is everything. Travelling? Do your best with what you have. A consistent position matters more than a perfect backdrop.
- Same outfit (or as close as possible). A bikini is ideal. Sports bra and shorts works great too. Whatever you choose, keep it consistent and keep it minimal. The less in the way, the more we can actually see.
- Good lighting. Natural light is your best friend. Face a window, not away from it. No harsh shadows across your body.
- Prop your phone or get someone to help. Awkward angles make it impossible to compare photos over time. Eye-level is the goal.
- Take them on the same day each month. First thing in the morning, before eating, works best. Consistent timing, consistent results.
- Flex in every single shot. Relaxed photos don't show muscle. You worked for this, show it.
- No filters, no editing. I know. But this is data, not content. Keep it real so we can track what's actually changing.

UPLOADING YOUR PHOTOS

Head to the Progress section in Trainerize, tap the camera icon, and upload all three shots. Please do this as soon as you can after setting up your account. I use your photos to guide your programming, so the sooner I have them, the better I can build something that works for you from day one. Then repeat once a month on check-in day.
